The city council of Mercer has fixed the salary of the mayor at $60 per month, an exceedingly modest sum.

The five ladies were regaled yesterday afternoon in a very reasonable way with a station of delicious ice cream, the gift of Confectioner F. W. Wilson. The kindly remembrance was fully appreciated.

An athletic association has been organized at Park City, Utah, under the name of the Park City Athletic Association. By way of opening an entertainment was given Saturday evening at Douglas' hall, and a very large attendance greeted the performers. While many entertaining events took place, the chief one was the boxing match between Dick Stetson, of St. Louis, and Frank Perrell, of New York. It was a very scientific affair, and better than anything of the kind before held in Park City, every one present being highly pleased.

STREET CAR ACCIDENT.

Motorman Gray of the Rapid Transit Injured.

Motorman Gray, of the Fort Douglas Rapid Transit line, met with quite a painful accident on the 12:36 trip from town yesterday, and besides doing up Gray, the car got shaken up pretty well and a twelve-inch pole was made to look like a cannon ball had struck it.

As the car neared the terminus at the Fort with Gray and Stewart as crew, the motor became unmanageable and the car went over the tie at the end and struck the post that holds the wire, with a mighty force. There was a terrific crash and when the car had been somewhat drawn away the post was found to be completely severed. As the car struck, Motorman Gray was precipitated forward, his head striking the pole. In consequence his eyes and head are colored and swollen, but the accident was not as serious as it might have been and he will report for work this morning.

The power house was telephoned and men were sent with a construction car to pull the runaway back. There are free toothpicks galore around the terminus, and they are all lengths and sizes.

CHURCHES YESTERDAY.

Rev. Adelbert L. Hudson's Discourse on "The Holy Grail."

IT WAS CHILDREN'S DAY.

SPECIAL SERVICES HELD AT THE FIRST METHODIST.

The Young Men's Christian Association—At the First Congregational—Rev. G. W. Roberts' Discourse at the Third Presbyterian Church—At the Tabernacle.

"The Holy Grail" was the subject of Mr. Hudson's sermon yesterday morning at Unity hall. He said that arising from its religious symbolism, much purely literary interest attached to the legend of the Grail. In its simplest form the story is that of Joseph of Arimathea, who took the body of Jesus for burial, took also the cup or bowl used by Jesus at the last supper, and having first received in it some drops of blood from Jesus' wounds, kept the sacred relic by him always. That it worked many miracles, furnished Joseph with food while in prison, and instructing him as an oracle; that afterwards he brought to England, where it was held by many people, and had power to heal diseases, and to bring good fortune to all who saw or touched it; that it remained for generations at Blaenau in England, and that it was its line of hereditary guardians fell into sin, and then it was carried away by angels, and has since then been seen only at rare intervals by some kind of miracle, of supreme faith, deep humility and absolute devotion to the search for it.

The exact origin, or time of origin, of the legend as connected with Christianity is uncertain. It first appears in a story of the twelfth century, and then in connection with Arthur and the round table, whose knights go in search of the holy wonder-working cup. It is certain that the conception of a Christian relic arose in England, and probably from some Welsh monk or hermit, the time varying, according to different authorities, from the eighth century to the twelfth century.

In general the conception of a miracle-working cup is pre-Christian and can be traced back into remotest antiquity. The Druids taught that the earth was a living being, and that the bowl, containing a drink which inspired their songs and wrought many miracles. From the songs of the Druid bards this idea passed early into the popular tales of the Welsh people. In fact it is among the oldest of the Celtic folklore. The same legend appears among the traditions of other nations. The cup of Djemshid in the Persian story, the horn of plenty of the Greeks, the purse of Fortunatus, the lamp of Aladdin, and other wonder-working receptacles of tradition, are clearly variations of the same story. In connection with the myth of an earthly paradise, which pervades ancient mythology, there is also a trace of the same cup legend in the story of the golden apple, which disappeared on account of the wickedness of men, there was left behind a wonderful relic, a costly and miraculous vessel, from which all the blessings of heaven would be poured out upon the earth, if only the vessel might be found and held by men.

The transition from this pagan conception to the Christian legend is natural and easy. The same thing has happened here that is found in nearly all of Christian symbolism. The priests and monks, finding the minds of the people possessed by pagan myths and legends, adapted them to some phase of Christian story, and thus gave to them a new significance. This story of a wonder-working cup readily adapted itself to the Catholic conception of the Eucharist, and so the legend of the holy Grail became a symbol of the miracle of transubstantiation in the celebration of the mass. An added local feature of the story of the bringing of the cup to England may be traced to the effort to show an independent origin of the English church from Palestine, separate and distinct from the authority of Rome. And the fact is significant that the first appearance of the Grail literature is simultaneous with the controversy between Henry the Second of England and the church of Rome as to the question of investiture.

But the value to our present time of the lessons of the past is in no way diminished or destroyed by their legendary character. In truth a legend may be, and generally is, of greater value than a fact. Isolated facts teach us but little of the growth of civilization, while legends show the growing power of the human mind, and the crude material forms and superstitions they often convey to us deep and subtle spiritual truths which have been forming for ages in the minds of men, and which find their natural mode of expression in some form of poetic symbolism.

The legend of the Grail readily interprets itself into the language of our modern life. It is a story of man, whether we call it the divine element to humanity or the Christ spirit in mankind, which, could we possess it, promises the choicest blessings to the soul. It is a story which can be attained only by an attitude of mind and soul similar to that which is set forth in the conditions requisite for the finding of the Grail by the knights of Arthur's court—loyalty, courage, unswerving faith, true humility, the losing of our petty individuality and through that the finding of our larger selves, devotion to duty and a blameless life. These conditions worked out in the twilight of our race, are well presented in the poem of our English poet-laureate, "The Holy Grail." But to these is super-added by our own poet of Edward, in the legend of Sir Launcelot, a condition of special importance to our own time.

The holy supper is kept indeed. In what we share with another's need, we can hope to grasp and hold the supreme blessing which is symbolized in the spirit of this legendary lore. The test of all truth is its adaptation to the needs of human life and never did such needs cry out with more urgency than now and here. Pious meditation has its proper place in the soul's development; but it can only reach its best results when it permeates the whole of our life, when we are as the poet says, "no one lives to himself alone, but we are members of one body."

Then will the legend of the Grail become a living truth, and its promised blessing will be poured into the currents of our daily lives.

The eastern markets the past week have shown but little activity, and no change in prices to speak of, except on the side of dry lot sheep, which have become scarce and in good demand at higher prices.

The demand for good spring lambs continues good, and trading in this line continues spirited at good prices for what is known as middle weights. The run of good cattle from the southern range country has been unusually light up to the present time, principally on account of the very low prices prevailing. Growers prefer to hold for the late summer or early fall market, and give the farmers and late or summer feeders a chance to clean up as much surplus from the farms as possible, hoping that as soon as another big corn crop is assured a demand for feeders will spring the market.

At the Young Men's rally yesterday afternoon Prof. W. Metcalf, of the great music institute, spoke on "What Was Prosperous." The audience was very large.
